Cartoons are Not Just for Fun

Lesson plan author: Bobbie Mason, Mt. Vernon Elementary
Intended grade level: 5th
Number of students: varies
Major content: U.S. History
Unit: Current events
Lesson length: Two 50-minute class periods

Context
The use of political/editorial cartoons will help students shed their “presentism” and use the skills that they have developed in order to think critically. Students will use inquiry strategies in order to enhance their own curiosity and gain a better knowledge of difficult or controversial materials. Students make decisions based on how they are influenced by what they hear, read, and see in various forms of media around them.

Thoughts Prior to Lesson
The use of political cartoons is a way for students to become actively engaged learners and develop visual literacy skills. When analyzing these documents students will identify different methods of persuasion used to convey meaning, point of view, themes. Students will also exercise critical thinking skills.

This lesson is meant to be conducted with students who have had prior experience with analyzing visual images. It is recommended to use visual analysis strategies.

Most upper elementary students do not have a lot of experience with analyzing political/editorial cartoons. This lesson should be completed in a structured environment with the use of modeling and guided practice.

Instructions

Introduction to political/editorial cartoons: Editorial cartoons use simple pictures and text to make a point about a current event of the time under study. These cartoons use images of easily recognizable things, places or people in order to get their message across or to persuade individuals to take action.

When you are trying to interpret any editorial/political cartoon, students should try to look at the big picture that is being identified. Have students look at the picture. Tell them to first, take a look at the images and text in the cartoon, and describe what you see. Is there anything that looks familiar? Then have students think about what time period the image may be. What in the image could give you clues to what the time and what is going on? What is the artist of the cartoon trying to tell you?

Day 1

Ask students to think about symbols. Give students blank paper or whiteboards. Have them to draw symbols that they are familiar with. Have them switch with a partner and see if they can identify the meaning behind the symbols that they drew. (Some examples: The Pepsi red, white and blue circle, Golden arches of McDonalds, Nike Swoosh, and Chevrolet bow tie)

Discuss the activity with the students How did the pictures convey meanings and messages? Which is more powerful; words or images?

Introduce students to the words symbolism, exaggeration, labeling, analogy and irony. Use several large pieces of poster paper. Label each poster with the terms. Have students work in small groups to brainstorm ideas about what each term means. If students become stuck, help by using the following guided questions:

Symbolism: What is symbolism? What is the root word of symbolism? What is the symbol of the United States? What other examples of symbols can you think of? What does each of those symbols represent?

Exaggeration: What does it mean to exaggerate? Give an example of a time you exaggerated the truth. In a cartoon, what kinds of things are usually exaggerated? Why do we exaggerate things?

Labeling: What is the purpose of a label? Give some examples of labels. What purpose would a label serve in a cartoon drawing?

Analogy: What is an analogy? Give students an analogy such as; a glove is to hand as a sock is to foot or paint is to canvass as pencil is to journal. How would drawing or writing an analogy in a political cartoon support the artist’s message or point of view?

Irony: Explain to the students that irony is a kind of a surprise. It is the difference between what is expected to happen, and what actually does happen. Irony is like a glitch, a twist, or a last minute switch in the game. It is an interruption of events that cause an unexpected outcome.

(50 minutes)
Day 2

- Explain to students that today they will be analyzing editorial cartoons. Show the students the image, “Study Habits.” Go through the steps to analyze the cartoon with the students. This will serve as a guided practice activity. The students should hear you “think” out loud as you work through the cartoon. Then demonstrate how to fill out the analysis form. (20 minutes)

- Once the students are confident of their abilities, divide class into groups of 3-5 students. Give each group the cartoons. Each group should also be given the “Cartoon Analysis” sheet. Give each student the handout “Examples of symbols used in political cartoons.” The student groups should then be given time to analyze their cartoon. As students work, the teacher should monitor the groups’ discussions and interject suggestions if they group is having difficulties. (25 minutes)

- Each group should then present their finished analysis to the class. Groups should be cautioned to be able to support their position based on evidence found within the cartoon. As the groups are presenting, the rest of the class should be encouraged to take notes on the presentations and reflect on these in writing, such as their journals. These writings should compare explore the common themes and persuasive strategies as well as effectiveness of the cartoon. (15-20 minutes)

- Accommodations for IEP: Based on Individual plan for Student Suggestions

  - Scaffold student learning with simplified examples of political cartoons. Give students only one cartoon to analyze at a time.

  - Ask students to focus on analyzing the more basic persuasive techniques of symbolism, exaggeration, and labeling. Give additional, guided support to help students with analogy and irony.

Gifted and Talented Suggestions

- Encourage students to work independently on their Political Cartoon Analysis Charts.

- Ask students to locate a series of political cartoons that share a common theme. Have them identify the theme and conduct a full comparative analysis of the cartoons using the analysis chart. Have them develop a presentation of their work to share with the class.

- Give students the opportunity to research a topic of their choosing and develop a series of political cartoons representing different points of view. Ask students to write a summary of their work that explains their design choices according the elements of persuasion.
Assessment Plan

In tabular format, organize how objectives will be assessed. Include copies of assessment instruments and rubrics (if applicable).

Impact

- This lesson is designed to have students critically think about primary sources. It is also designed to demonstrate how to integrate tiered assignments into regular classroom instruction. Students will increase skills and knowledge of using primary source documents that are both visual and text in form. In doing so, the student will increase critical thinking skills both individually and as a group member. Students will also be given opportunities to work in collaborative groups that will encourage them to be active participants. These activities are learner driven and focused on process.

Refinement / Lesson Extension

- Teacher will make adjustments as needed for implementation, based on the reflection. This lesson could be extended into the areas of Liberty, citizenship and Civic Responsibilities.

Cartoonists use five main elements to convey their point of view:

- Symbolism: Using an object to stand for an idea
- Captioning and Labels: Used for clarity and emphasis
- Analogy: A comparison between two unlike things that share some characteristics
- Irony: The difference between the way things are and the way things should be or the way things are expected to be
- Exaggeration: Overstating or magnifying a problem or a physical feature or habit: big nose, bushy eyebrows, large ears, baldness
Great...another photo of an abused Iraqi prisoner! Those responsible should be severely punished! We should condemn all abuse and coercion and humiliation and—

That's an American hostage.

Oh. Never mind.
